Crisis of Regime

The recent feud among the coalition partners in the present government of Israel goes deeper than superficial manifestations indicate. However, it is not a crisis of the regime itself — at least not yet.

The real problem of Israeli politics stems from the odd party-system modeled after the ideological divisions within the World Zionist Organization. Every political party or group representing peculiar interests which ever had existed in any country in the Diaspora is represented on the political scene of Israel.

Politically the country is not only the ingathering of the exiles but a kind of home for political leaders from exile who practise their trade in the Jewish homeland.

* * * * *

Former Prime Minister David Ben Gurion has made a sincere effort in recent years to alter this situation. However, it seems that, because he had tolerated an identical party-system during the first years of statehood, dividends now are being paid those who would perpetuate these divisions.

Only very recently Prof. Eri Jabotinsky, who leads the opposition within Herut, held several discussions with B.G.

In an interview with Yediot Aharonot, popular Israeli daily, the son of the famous Vladimir admitted that Ben Gurion has changed his mind about district and personal elections. When Ben Gurion was in power during the first years of Israel's independence, Eri remarked, B.G.'s party voted against change of the electoral system while he, Eri, as a member of the Knesset fought for such conversion of the political organization of Israel.

Today Ben Gurion leads this movement.

And here lies the crux of the problem.

The present Cabinet of Israel consists of parties and groups not in accord on basic issues. For example, in the present Eshkol cabinet is Mapai, the largest minority group in Parliament, which virtually controls the governing forces and follows a pragmatic philosophy adapting itself constantly to momentary needs.

Besides Mapai are the leftist Ahdut Avoda and, still further left, Mapam. Both parties must consider the anti-religious beliefs of their supporters.

To the right of Mapai is the National Religious Party which is committed to the present ties between the rabbinate and the government in many areas of Israeli life.

The same division of opinion is noticeable in the economic field. The leftist groups are under pressure of their membership to obtain wage increases because of the rise of the cost of living while the National Religious Party and the middle class independent Liberals, another partner, are on record as being opposed to the demand of the Histadrut to grant workers a cost of living allowance increase.

This last issue now is the basis of both the government crisis in Israel and the bickering among the coalition partners which, together, carry a majority in the Knesset.

Premier Eshkol and Minister Sapir take an extremely courageous stand when they inform the leftist groups that any increase in wages will mean ipso facto a further decline of Israeli exports as the industry will be pushed out of a highly competitive international market. And yet, they must give in to their leftist partners . . .

What happened last week is exactly this: in order to avoid a crisis of the regime, which none of the coalition partners really wants, differences were patched up temporarily in such manner that two categories of workers in the lowest income bracket were granted a two and four percent cost of living allowance respectively. (Economists in Israel say candidly that even this minor adjustment will affect the industry.)

* * * * *

Thus what still is the problem? Ben Gurion, the General Zionists and a minority in Herut led by Jabotinsky and Tamir maintain simply that the crisis is a crisis of the regime.

In order to stabilize the government and create a situation wherein a prime minister and minister of finances are not at the mercy of parties having five or eight members in Parliament, there must be a policy with responsibility to the people.

In order to bring about such change, the election laws must be altered from the present French Third Republic-multi-party system to direct elections that would give Israel a two-party parliament on the model of the United States: a government and an opposition.

Thus only will the small parties be eliminated and Israel will have the choice between a labor government and a free enterprise cabinet.

* * * * *

Speaking last week in London, England, Shimon Peres, one of Ben Gurion's closest aides and a man credited with Israel's military development, openly stated at a meeting of the Joint Palestine Appeal that the distribution methods of funds raised for Israel must be changed; these funds should not be used to help Israeli political parties through their Zionist counterparts in the Diaspora.

"All money raised in the Diaspora should be used to help the absorption of immigrants," Peres concluded.

* * * * *

For years this has been my contention. Leaders of our Welfare Funds all over America now realize that this surgery must be performed immediately. For it is up to us to practise what we preach: we must help Israel. And helping Israel at this moment—when she faces a crisis both internationally and internally—is first to make known to the political groups here that under the present conditions the political Zionist constellation is not in the interest of the people dwelling in Zion.

After 25 Years

KNESSET HONORS STERN

Jerusalem - The memory of "Yair" (the underground name of Abraham Stern), leader of the pre-State Fighters For The Freedom of Israel underground who was killed by British police in 1942, was honoured at a meeting in the Knesset, Monday.

The Knesset presidium has agreed to place a small meeting hall at the disposal of the memorial's organizers, on the occasion of the 25th anniversary of Yair's death.

The organizing committee, which is headed by Deputy Speaker Arye Ben-Eliezer of Gahal included representatives of Herut, the Liberals (S.Z. Abramov), the Alignment (Shulamit Aloni), Rafi (Shimon Peres) and the N.R.P. (Yitzhak Raphael).

The meeting was addressed by Mr. Menahem Begin, Dr. Y. Eldad and Mr. Y. Shamir.

The Alignment (Mapai - Ahdut Avoda) acquiescence in holding the memorial meeting in the Knesset is seen as an additional step towards overcoming the animosity which prevailed between the members of the official pre-State underground, the Hagana, and the members of the "dissident" undergrounds, the Irgun and Lehi.

It follows Prime Minister Eshkol's approval, two and a half years ago, of a State ceremony for the re-interment of the remains of Revisionist leader Ze'ev Jabotinsky on Mt. Herzl.

ACCEPTS CANADIAN'S INVITATION — Toronto's Dr. Stuart E. Rosenberg, with David Ben Gurion at Sde Boker. Mr. Ben Gurion agreed to visit Toronto on March 20th when he will address the UJA dinner here.

TORONTO, MONTREAL TO WELCOME B. G.

Canadian Jewry in both its largest communities, Montreal and Toronto, awaits impatiently the arrival here of the Hon. David Ben Gurion, Israel's Founding Father and its Prime Minister for many years.

Jews in Canada will observe Ben Gurion's eightieth birthday at two mammoth rallies in both cities.

In Toronto David Ben Gurion will be guest of the United Jewish Appeal on March 20th. The outstanding Jewish leader of our time has accepted the invitation of Toronto's Rabbi Stuart E. Rosenberg, 1967 chairman of the United Jewish Appeal.

At this gala reception for him, Ben Gurion will speak in English.

Alex Fisher and Philip Granovsky of the Study Mission of Toronto's UJA confirmed this week to The Canadian Jewish News Ben Gurion's visit here on that day.

The Study Mission of Toronto's United Jewish Appeal has returned this week from Poland, Czechoslovakia, Roumania, Hungary. It also visited some countries in North Africa and the Middle East including Iran.

Alex Fisher will host a UJA campaign leadership meeting this coming Monday, February 27th, when off-the-record reports of the Mission will be relayed to the outstanding members of the community.

In Montreal David Ben Gurion will be the guest of the State of Israel Bonds on Tuesday, March 21st.

According to our report from Jerusalem, Ben Gurion will arrive on the North American continent at the beginning of March.

Dr. Stuart E. Rosenberg has released a special message this week to Toronto's Jewish community from Israel's Chief Rabbi I. Y. Unterman.

In his message and appeal, transmitted to Dr. Rosenberg during last week's visit to the Chief Rabbinate, Dr. Unterman says, i.e.:

"Peace and blessings to you from Zion.

"We were very happy to meet with members of your Mission who acquainted us with your activities on behalf of the United Jewish Appeal. I wish to stress that the help of the United Jewish Appeal in the Diaspora is most vital to the progress and growth of Israel in every respect, materially and spiritually.

"Thus in our time the UJA is of utmost importance.

"In the spiritual sphere we need support. I am happy to inform you that we now are witness to a great awakening among a substantial section of youth which is drawing nearer to Judaism and to those who study the Torah. In this area we behold a historic phenomenon of great significance. There definitely is an urge to study the Torah, thus it is our holy task to exploit this spiritual awakening in order to bring closer Torah living and observance of Mitzvot in all its fullness. However, in order to reach this objective, we also need aid for our resources are not sufficient. Make the effort, brethren, and may the shelter of peace shield you and may we all rejoice in the ultimate, full redemption. Amen.

I. Y. Unterman
The Chief Rabbi of Israel"

HATE LITERATURE ON TORONTO CAMPUS

Arab From Aden Heads Drive

A CANADIAN JEWISH NEWS EXCLUSIVE

Antisemitic literature under the guise of anti-Zionist "information" is being distributed freely in the classrooms of Toronto's Ryerson Polytechnical Institute. The main disseminator of this hate literature is a student from Aden, the famous seaport on the Red Sea, where an underground terrorist organization is fighting the British. His name is Essa Faraj, an employee of the Ryerson Book Store.

While the administration of the Institute promises to investigate the right of the distributors of this hate literature on the campus, the Daily Ryersonian, the students' newspaper, editorially defends the agitators.

Not only did the Daily Ryersonian declare that it supports Essa Faraj, not only did it give him an unusual amount of publicity but it published the interviews with Jewish students protesting this outrage under a misleading caption: Jewish Students Say, So What? To Brochure.

While, according to the headline of the editor, the Jewish students did not care, the text of the interview belies the title.

• Rosalyn Lipsky said, "I feel the individual who gave out the pamphlets should not be allowed to distribute them here. He is in a privileged position being an employee and a student."

• Bill Cutler declared, "I am an anti-Zionist but I think these pamphlets are disgusting."

• David Lennick, "I don't like stuff like this." But he does not believe in censorship of material.

• Judy Lander, "The pamphlets are definitely antisemitic."

While these are the opinions of students, the editorial of the Daily Ryersonian, which claims "to objectively inform all Ryerson students," declares:

"Anti-Zionist literature distributed in a Ryerson classroom last week had a perfect right to be there."

Following are several quotes of this so-called anti-Zionist literature:

• Title of brochure: Zionist Leaders Conspire To Railroad The United States Into A Third World War.

One of the chapters in the booklet "informs" that the Zionists railroaded the United States into World War I; another chapter, Zionists railroaded the United States into World War II.

This booklet is published by, Palestine Arab Delegation, 441 Lexington Avenue, New York City.

• Another brochure, also by the same Arab delegation, presents "proof of guilt" with pictures of children murdered by Zionists.

It also declares that Zionists "desecrated, profaned and destroyed Christian and Moslem holy places." Then it states that the Zionists are guilty of war crimes and crimes against humanity.

Jewish students at Ryerson are deeply shocked by the tolerance of the distribution of the material and the tolerance of university authorities. They understand even less the inactivity of Jewish and non-sectarian organizations here committed to the defense of human rights and to the fight against the dissemination of hatred.

One student, a non-Jew, told The Canadian Jewish News:

"I am glad to see protests against von Thadden in Germany. But how about guarding our own vineyard of freedom?"

Saul Hayes, CJC leader, says Education Conference will take place.

Congress Calls Conference

2,000 Montrealers for Subsidized Jewish Schools

Montreal (CJN) - The Canadian Jewish Congress, Eastern Region, is making definite arrangements to call a conference on Jewish education with special emphasis on the situation of the day schools, Saul Hayes, Q.C., national executive vice president of Congress, told The Canadian Jewish News this week.

This conference is a direct result of the growing interest in and concern for the Jewish day schools in Quebec. The committee for the tax supported day schools here demands that the Canadian Jewish Congress declare officially its demand that the Jewish school system be recognized on par with the confessional school system of the Protestants and Catholics.

In his talk to the reporter of The Canadian Jewish News, Mr. Hayes, though confirming that arrangements for such a conference on Jewish education now are progressing, cautioned simultaneously Jewish public opinion that it may take awhile till this rally can be held. It needs thorough preparations, he stressed, the setting up of a special machinery. Also, Mr. Hayes added, the executive and leadership of Canadian Jewish Congress must analyze and evaluate briefs relevant to this problem submitted to it by organizations prior to the last conference of January 29th.

As it happens, Mr. Hayes concluded, some delay may be a good thing as it will allow time for tempers to cool off. "This is serious business, an earnest problem before the community. A conference on Jewish education is too important to be held in an atmosphere of tension; it requires calm and reason."

Meanwhile the movement for tax support for the Jewish day schools in Quebec appears to be growing rapidly. Many individuals and organizations have declared themselves in favor of such demands.

Last week the Committee for the Tax Supported Jewish Schools held a very successful meeting at the hall of the Chevra T'hillim Congregation, which was well attended despite freezing weather.

Chairman Israel Ackerman received an ovation when he announced before the assembled that signed memberships endorsing his committee's stand has reached the two-thousand mark. Only a few minutes following the announcement a committee member arrived bringing with him signatures of two-hundred new members, making it 2,200.

Much of the session was devoted to discussing the position to be taken at a forthcoming meeting with the Canadian Jewish Congress leadership. Committee members Stan Yetnikoff announced that arrangements are being made for such meeting in the near future.

Also it was announced that many Jewish organizations in Montreal have requested the committee for speakers to discuss Jewish education before their membership.

RECORD OF NEW IMMIGRANT

Haifa (JCNS) - After spending the night at Kibbutz Gesher Haziv, a five-member California family which had come to "settle" there the previous evening, took a taxi to Lydda and flew back home.

A member of the Kibbutz had been to the airport to receive the family on behalf of Kibbutz Gesher Haziv, Members of the kibbutz say this must be the briefest stay of an immigrant family in Israel on record.

FRANCE SUPPORTS ISRAELI ECC BID

Paris - Foreign Minister Maurice Couve de Murville has given a categorical assurance to a leading member of the French Jewish community that France will throw its full support behind the Israel bid for association with the Common Market.

M. Salomon Friedrich, Herut leader and Director-General of the France-Israel Alliance, revealed this when he told the press of the far-ranging talk he had held with the Minister last week on relations between the two countries.

M. Friedrich said:

"I was very pleased to hear M. Couve de Murville say he would do all he could to help Israel reach a solution with the Common Market. We also discussed prospects for Soviet Jews rejoining their families abroad. I am convinced the French Government understands these problems and will help us in the future."

Camp Survivor Heads Community

Prague (JCNS) - Mr. Frantisuek Fuchs, 62, vice-chairman, has been elected chairman of the council by the assembly of the Federation of Jewish Communities in Bohemia and Moravia in Prague.

Mr. Fuchs, who is a survivor of Theresienstadt concentration camp, has represented the organisation at conferences in Yugoslavia and Geneva. Both Mr. Fuchs and Mr. Bedrich Hellmann, 52, who succeeds him as vice-chairman, have been active in Jewish organisations since their youth.

Dr. Frantisuek Bass, of Brno, was re-elected a second vice-chairman, and Dr. Benjamin Eichler, the chairman of the Federation of Jewish Communities of Slovakia, was among the guests who congratulated the new chairman.

Dr. Richard Feder, the Chief Rabbi of Czechoslovakia, expressed pleasure that the Prague Jewish community was sponsoring the studies at the State training seminary for rabbis in Budapest, of a young student from Kosice high school in Slovakia, who had agreed to officiate as a rabbi in the city after he qualifies.

The assembly confirmed celebrations in the summer of 1968 to mark the millennium of the Prague Jewish community and the 700th anniversary of the Altneuschul in the city.

Slovak Novelist Glorifies Jewish Heroes

Prague (JCNS) - "The Wounded Scar", a first novel by a Slovak writer, Jan Bohun, which has a Jewish intellectual as its central character, has attracted considerable attention in Czechoslovakia.

Mr. Bohun, who is not a Jew, wished to honour the memory of his Jewish friends by writing this book. He also told "Praca", the trade union newspaper here, in an interview: "We must write the truth. We must learn to inspire people to want the truth and tell them openly about anything wrong that is being done".

The hero of "The Wounded Scar", Erich Gruenstein, after escaping from Auschwitz to Switzerland, makes his way westwards and joins the Free Czech Army fighting with the Allies. After the war he returns to Slovakia.

He is arrested and tried for cosmopolitanism and crimes against the State during the post-Stalin period, but when he is finally found innocent and released from prision the moral victory is his. But he is bleeding from old wounds.

Jan Kadar, the Oscar-winning co-producer of "The Shop on Main Street", is reported to be interested in filming "The Wounded Scar".

LAWYER SUPERSALESMAN

by Montreal reporter

Usually one accepts the smooth functioning of an Israel Bonds banquet or other such affair quite naturally. However, it is proper sometimes to think appreciatively of the "back room boys and girls" whose skill and enthusiasm have made it all possible. One kind thought should be beamed especially toward chief of the backroom boys, Chaim Lewin.

Vilna born Chaim Lewin, 57, is a graduate lawyer. However, the outbreak of war in 1939 prevented his practising the profession.

In 1948 he arrived in Canada. Here he has been associated with the Montreal Israel Bond Organization, of which he is manager, since its inception in 1953. Those who work with him maintain that he brings to his day to day bond activities a precise, analytical and legal mind — whatever he retains from his days of law.

During his years with the Bond organization, Lewin has seen Montreal, first city in Canada as buyer of bonds and among the first fifteen in the world, attain the pinnacle of having purchased more than $27,000,000 worth of Israel bonds.

In all modesty, he gives credit for this achievement to his executive, his working colleagues and to Montreal Jewry itself. Conversely, associates who know him well and who on occasion have seen him work right through the night say that much of the credit for the success of the yearly drives belongs to Chaim.

He is married and the father of two children: Martin, married and residing in Toronto, who also works for the Israel Bond organization; 15-year-old Phyllis who still is at school.

In his wife he finds the perfect helpmate interested in everything Jewish. She serves on the Board of Sisterhood of the Chevra Kadisha B'nai Jacob Congregation and is a member of Pioneer Women.

Report from Miami Beach

TO LAUNCH $115 MILLION ISRAEL BONDS DRIVE

Miami Beach - Outstanding Toronto Jewish leaders are going to Miami to take part in an eightieth birthday tribute to David Ben-Gurion, first Prime Minister of the State of Israel, it was announced by Mr. Max Shecter, Chairman of the Greater Toronto Committee for State of Israel Bonds.

The Tribute, at which Mr. Ben-Gurion will be the guest of honor, will be held on Saturday evening, March 4, as the climax of a three-day International Inaugural Conference for State of Israel Bonds at the Fontainebleau Hotel here. More than 2,500 Jewish personalities from the United States and Canada will attend the conference.

Torontonians in attendance will include: Mr. D. Lou Harris, National Chairman and Mrs. Harris; Mr. Harry Rubin, Chairman of Trustees and Mrs. Rubin; Mr. Phil Granovsky, Chairman of Guardians and Mrs. Granovsky; Mr. and Mrs. Sidney Arbuck; Mr. and Mrs. Murray Auerback; Mr. and Mrs. Samuel Cornblum; Mr. and Mrs. Louis Freedman; Mr. and Mrs. D. Hartsman; Mr. and Mrs. Bernard Herman; Mr. & Mrs. Jack Jacobs; Mr. and Mrs. Manny Kachuck: Mrs. Freda Kaplan; Mr. and Mrs. Samuel Kaporovsky; Mr. and Mrs Morris Kaufman; Mr. and Mrs. Meyer Levine; Mr. and Mrs. Samuel Milgrom; Mr. and Mrs. Benjamin Pape; Mr. and Mrs. Montague Raisman; Mr. and Mrs. A.J. Raisman; Mr. and Mrs. A. J. Richmond; Mr. and Mrs. Marcus Schipper; Mr. and Mrs. Irving Schwartz; Mrs. Max Sharpe; Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Sherkin; Mr. and Mrs. David Sitzer; Mr. and Mrs. Stan Smith; Mrs. Anne Stulberg; Mr. and Mrs. Nathan Teperman; Mr. and Mrs. William Wagman; Mr. and Mrs. Max White; Mr. and Mrs. Asher Winestock; Mr. and Mrs. Max Wolfe; and Mr. and Mrs. Samuel Wortsman.

The Miami conference, Mr. Shecter pointed out, will mark the formal launching of the worldwide 1967 campaign to sell a minimum of $115,000,000. in State of Israel Bonds. He added: "There is special significance in the tribute to Mr. Ben-Gurion under the auspices of the Israel Bond Organization, because he was the one who first projected the idea of an Israel Bond drive, and came to the United States in 1951 to launch the entire program."

GUEST OF HONOR AT THE ONTARIO BREAKFAST, THURSDAY, FEBRUARY 23, AT THE FONTAINEBLEAU HOTEL — Max Shecter, currently the Chairman of the Greater Toronto Committee for State of Israel Bonds, has been an active worker for Israel and State of Israel Bonds from the very beginning. Under his leadership, Toronto recorded its highest sales of State of Israel Bonds to date.

JEWISH VOTE MAY DECIDE ELECTIONS

by Fred Goldstein

Paris (JCNS) - There are comparatively few Jews among the 2,400 candidates who will be contesting the French Parliamentary elections on March 5 and March 19. Moreover, hardly any of the Jewish candidates are so openly associated with Jewish Organisations as is the case in Britain. Yet the Jewish vote in several sensitive districts may well determine the fate of quite a number of Parliamentary seats.

Among the 486 Communist Party candidates and their 486 "deputies" (each candidate must submit the name of a "deputy" who will take his place if he becomes a Minister), there are only six Jewish names. The best-known of them is Me. Charles Lederman, a barrister, who heads the Communist Jewish organisation and is "deputy candidate" in the old Jewish district of Paris - the "Pletzl". But the main Communist candidate there is a Gentile, who confesses his ignorance of Jewish affairs.

The main "Jewish candidate" of the communists is M. Henri Fiszbin, in the popular Belleville district of Paris, where an open appeal to Jewish voters is being made by the Communists.

The greatest proportion of Jewish candidates is to be found in the P.S.U. (Unified Socialist Party), a very Left-wing intellectual movement. It has Jewish candidates in the three districts of Paris where it can be useful, but only one of them M. David Weill, a Paris municipal councillor, has shown interest in Jewish affairs.

There are certainly not more than ten Jews among the candidates of the "Federation" of M. Mitterrand which lays claim to being the great Opposition body. Two of these candidates are of some communal interest; M. Jean-Pierre Bloch, a former Minister who retains his association with various self defence and anti-defamation associations, and M. Claude Estier (in fact, Ezratty), who is contesting the Paris seat of M. Sanguinetti, the Corsican Minister of Ex-Servicemen and a powerful Gaullist campaigner.

M. Estier, a journalist, has for a long time been an advocate of Nasser and of Franco-Arab reconciliation. M. Snaguinetti, on the other hand, has expressed friendship for Israel. They are contesting a popular constituency with a sizeable Jewish population.

Among M. Lecanuet's Democratic Centre candidates, the only one with Israeli associations is M. Pierre Gilbert, the former French Ambassador to Israel, who speaks fluent Hebrew and who was one of the "fathers" of Franco-Israeli friendship. M. Gilbert is a candidate in the Lourdes constituency, the famous Catholic miracle-town in the Pyrenees.

Strangely enough, in this town which lives on Catholic pilgrimages, a sizeable Jewish minority, mainly industrialists (including manufacturers of Christian articles such as rosaries, crosses and so on), could well determine the final decision.

Mme. Lecanuet is of Jewish candidates among the Gaulists. The most prominent of them is M. Lucien Neuwirth who will face the heavy guns of the opposition in his Saint-Etienne constituency in Central France, where the Jewish community will most probably side with him. M. Dassault (formerly bloch), the aircraft manufacturer, will be elected without fail, but his Jewish connections are slender, if they exist at all.

The former Prime Minister, M. Pierre Mendes-France will contest the Grenoble district in what promises to be the most scrutinised contest of the campaign. M. Mendes-France, one of the leaders of the opposition., will try to wrest the Grenoble seat from the Gaullist representative, M. Vanier, who was a member of a Parliamentary delegation to Israel last year and wrote a glowing official report on his visit.

The Grenoble community, which, as far as one can understand these things, voted for M. Vanier last time, will be divided this time. The businessmen will most probably continue to go "Gaullist", while the younger element, many of them students at the famous university, have shown Leftish leanings and may cast their votes for M. Mendes-France.

An interesting contest will take place in Belfort, where M. Dreyfus-Schmidt, an Opposition candidate, whose father was on the French Section of the World Jewish Congress, will try to unseat M. Raymond Schmittlein, the Gaullist president of the Franco-Israeli parliamentary friendship group.

As in several other cases, the issue here is between a Gentile, who shows great sympathy for Israel and who even took up the problem of Soviet Jewry, and a Jew who is rather estranged from Jewish affairs. The Belfort community might be the deciding factor in this contest, also a close one.

Not devoid of Jewish undertones is the fight in Lyons between M. Jacques Soustelle, a former Minister, and his erstwhile friend the Gaullist M. Charret. M. Soustelle, from exile, will try to regain his constituency, where a number of Jews live. He is remembered among the Lyons community as a great friend of Israel.

On the other hand, M. Charret, who has a Jewish wife, has shown consistent interest in the community. Here, as in other places, each Jewish vote may decide.

Also campaigning for Jewish votes is M. Pasquini, a Gaullist member for Nice, who is chairman of the Franco-Egyptian group in Parliament but who, nevertheless, helps in Keren Hayesod appeals.

Payments will be combined with your Old Age Security pension cheque. If you were entitled to a supplement as of January 1967, your first cheque to include the supplement will cover payment for each month back to January.

The new guaranteed income supplement is a monthly payment of $30 which will be added to your $75 Old Age Security pension if you have no other income. If you do have other income, but it is less than $720 a year ($60 a month), you still qualify for a supplement but on a reduced scale. This means that every Old Age Security pensioner in Canada is now guaranteed a monthly income of at least $105. A married couple is guaranteed at least $210 a month if both are Old Age Security pensioners. If you qualify, apply without delay. If you need help in filling out your application, contact your nearest Old Age Security, Canada Pension Plan or Income Tax Office. Addresses are listed in your booklet.

HEAR REPORT ON JEWISH MIGRATION

"A serious problem affecting Israel is the loss of regular income from reparations. This drastic cut has put Israel in a position whereby it depends on you to make up for the tremendous loss from which it now is suffering."

These are the words of Samuel Haber of New York City, assistant executive vice chairman of the Joint Distribution Committee, who spoke movingly for the furtherance of Toronto's United Jewish Appeal campaign, at a meeting of the Toronto Alumni Chapter, Alpha Omega Fraternity, when it held its annual Jewish Community Nite on Monday evening, February 13th, at Beth Tzedec.

Said Mr. Haber to the gathering of close to two-hundred: "On the North African scene, 505,000 Jews have left over the past few years for other countries. Why have these people moved and what are the impelling reasons that drive them out of their country of birth?

"One answer is the economic factor. Another is, the people are 'afraid' and this fear is rather compelling for those who do leave. For it could be considered a situation of sensitivity more readily than that of attempting to define it in relation to antisemitism or persecution.

"In 1962, there were 125,000 Jews in Algeria; today there are about 3,000 left. They are victims of circumstances beyond their control and this is our concern. Presently what we are doing is insufficient. Though some headway has been accomplished in proper child programing in North Africa. Children there are receiving medical aid, they are being educated, sent to summer camps and more.

"At present France and Italy are receiving Jewish immigrants from North Africa and other points in Europe.

"In the past few years, approximately 1,250,000 people emigrated to Israel, of whom 250,000 to 300,000 have not been integrated properly. They have become a burden and problem to the tiny state."

Harry Wolfson, well known economist and leader of Toronto's Jewish community, also spoke on behalf of the United Jewish Appeal.

SYRIA IS NOT INTERFSTED

Damascus, Syria - Damascus Radio "made clear" that the Syrian Government had no wish to display too great an interest in the talks with Israel at the Bnot Yaacov bridge. The briefest of reports was given.

CONSTRUCTION DIVISION AIDS

The campaign of the Construction Division of the UJA Campaign, the largest individual unit from the point of subscribers and dollars, is indicative of the construction industry. All important projects follow a planned projection which require close attention, all wheels work in unison; hence its success.

Under the expert guidance of co-chairmen Joe Berman, George Goldlist, Harry Gorman and Nathan Silver, program meetings take place every Sunday morning at the Primrose Club. Results attained by this large group of devoted workers is evident by their success.

Plans are being formulated for a dinner which will be held at the Inn on the Park, Thursday, March 24th.

ALEX G. FISHER
Mr. and Mrs. Alex G. Fisher will be hosts of the reception on March 20th.

FURNITURE DIVISION

Now nearing the completion of its canvas, the Furniture Division of the UJA Campaign, the first to start campaigning for funds this year, presently is cleaning up remaining outstanding names.

Chairman Robert Gordon has stated that a creditable increase in dollar pledges is evident; sixty new subscribers have been added to the rolls of the Furniture Division.

ACCOUNTANTS' PROGRESS

Mel Katz, chairman of the UJA Accountants Division, notes that pledge cards are showing an improvement over past years.

Though much remains to be done, a major effort in the campaign is being geared to a special meeting this coming Monday evening, February 27th, when Rabbi Stuart Rosenberg and members of the UJA Study Mission will be welcomed home.

As a supporting tribute to Rabbi Rosenberg, all campaign members have been contacted to complete their assignments by this date.

Nussbaum Criticized On Cardinal

Cologne (JCNS) - There is a certain measure of Jewish agreement here with Cardinal Frings, the 80-year-old Archbishop of Cologne, in his rejection of allegations against him by Rabbi Max Nussbaum, the chairman of the American Section of the World Jewish Congress.

Rabbi Dr. Scheftschewsky, of Cologne, and local Jewish leaders had a meeting with Cardinal Frings last week, and afterwards, both sides expressed regret at the "misunderstandings" which had arisen because of Rabbi Nussbaum's charges.

Rabbi Nussbaum had quoted the Cardinal as saying that "the Jews in Germany (in the 'twenties) had much too great an economic, political and cultural influence...The Jews of that time had gained great riches and wore these riches publicly for show. These were the reasons that made National Socialism psychologically possible".

The Cardinal in a statement later, pointed out that he had always detested Hitler's actions against the Jews from the depth of his soul and, during the Nazi regime, had sharply protested against the deportation of Jews. In Frankfort-am-Main, the German Co-ordinating Council of Associations for Christian-Jewish Co-operation deplored the publication of the talks between Rabbi Nussbaum and Cardinal Frings without previous consultation with those concerned.

N.P.D.-WHO ARE THEY?

Hanover (JCNS) - Among 1,000 members of the extreme Right-wing National Democratic Party in West Germany, 620 are war veterans of the Nazi regime and 183 are former or active Servicemen of the West German armed forces, according to statistics compiled by the party leadership here.

A further analysis shows that 92 per cent of the party members are men; 25 per cent are classified as employees; 13 per cent as civil servants; 13 per cent as workers; and 12 per cent as pensioners.

Age groups include 45-65 years, 38.2 per cent; 25-45, 35.7 per cent; under 25, 7.4 per cent.

Important Task:

HELPING OUR STUDENTS

There is still time for Jewish organizations interested in our students to call the attention of the universities to the fact that this year Passover coincides with the most strenuous pre-examination period.

Many Jewish students feel they must forego their innermost wish to participate in Seder celebrations and in the general holiday observance in order to pass. This is an alternative unfair to the average student. For only the very pious, the very dedicated, will choose to postpone the test till vacation time. Thus a student who once breaks the tradition of observing the holiday eventually may disassociate himself completely from religious practices.

It is known that many students have become indifferent to religious custom because they once broke the rule.

These observations may sound parochial. But they are based on research and knowledge of life. In our day when religion faces an onslaught from all sides, the Jewish community cannot permit the average student to become exposed to this temptation.

Should this concern become known to them, we believe the administration of any university would consider an alternative that does not involve a student's renunciation of adherence to a hallowed religious custom.

It is not too much to urge the leadership of the community to embrace this cause of the helpless student who would want to both perform his duty in school and yet be able to observe his religious practices.

Toronto's Guest:

SALUTE TO NEW CHIEF RABBI

Toronto Jewry will have the distinct honor of receiving next Thursday the new Chief Rabbi of the British Commonwealth, Dr. Immanuel Jakobovits, at Shaarei Shomayim.

We are sure that, in presenting Dr. Jakobovits to Toronto Jewry, his sterling qualities and his Jewish scholarship will be mentioned. However, we should like to add our own recognition to the eminent spiritual leader by citing his exemplary dedication to integral Jewish education.

Last year Dr. Jakobovits, speaking of the cost of Jewish survival, said, i.e.:

" . . . The drive to grant every Jewish child its right to an intensive Jewish education must become as urgent an objective of Jewish policy for the reclamation of Judaism as Zionism was in the past generation for the reclamation of the Jewish people. The enormous funds still raised for Jewish welfare services (now usually non-sectarian and heavily subsidized by government aid) and for "defense" agencies (now largely redundant and of minor urgency) should gradually be diverted to propagating and building up Jewish schools for hundreds of thousands of Jewish children and youngsters now alienated from their heritage. Only by making the love and understanding of Judaism prevail over any other love can the tide of assimilation and inter-marriage be stemmed. At the same time, every effort must be bent on ensuring that parents willing to enroll their children in Jewish elementary and high schools will not be financially penalized, by having to pay for secular education of other children at public schools through taxation, while they are denied similar benefits for their own children."

We salute Chief Rabbi Jakobovits as a leader in the movement for securing Jewish survival through education.

ISRAEL THESE DAYS . . . . .

letter to the editor

EULOGY vs HISTORY

Dear Editor:

In a New York daily, I read two obituaries about prominent Jews who recently have passed away. It seems to me that in both cases historic facts were distorted.

I know that Henry M. Morgenthau, President Roosevelt's Secretary of Treasury, was active in recent years on behalf of Jewish causes. Yet it is a fact that during World War II Mr. Morgenthau refused to cooperate with organizations, active in the United States, which tried to rescue Jews from Hitler's Europe. It was not some officials in his department, as one writer observed, who sabotaged efforts to buy Jewish lives from the Nazis; it was Morgenthau's own reluctance to depart from business as usual that created a problem.

Indeed very few not involved in the movements to save the Jews in Europe may not have heard of the incident concerning the now deceased Rosh Yeshiva, Rabbi Abraham Kalmanowitz of Mir, who actually cried in Mr. Morgenthau's office when he (the rabbi) asked him to release some blocked funds in Switzerland. Morgenthau remained unmoved, according to the report of the late Rabbi Kalmanowitz.

True, one speaks but well of those who leave this world. However, when a historic figure is dealt with in retrospect, the truth should not be ignored.

All that some delegations had tried to obtain from Mr. Morgenthau was an arrangement similar to that agreed upon by the United States in the recent Cuban crisis where hostages were bought. In the case of Jews, Morgenthau did not see his duty. All I can say in his defense is that in those years he was overwhelmed by his Jewish inferiority complex and that he tried to repent later.

The second personality so much mourned and eulogized is Victor Gollancz, the famous British publisher and descendant of rabbis. Mr. Gollancz, in recent years, was very active in the cause of Arab refugees and other non-Jewish activities. But he very often proclaimed openly his lack of interest in Jewish survival.

KEEP SMILING

CONTRARY

A distinguished rabbi spent several days in Frankfort as house guest of Meyer Anschel Rothschild. He was pleased to see that in spite of numerous business interests the rich man was extremely scrupulous about the minutiae of the Law. Before departing, Rothschild asked the rabbi whether he had found everything to his liking.

"Herr Rothschild", said the rabbi, "during my stay at your home I became convinced that you are a truly pious Jew and I was therefore greatly surprised that you disregard one statement of the Torah."

"Which statement?" asked Rothschild.

"We are told in the Torah," replied the rabbi, "that 'Jeshurun waxed fat and kicked,' but while at your home I discovered that although you are wealthy you still are a loyal Jew."

BIRTHDAY TIME ALL YEAR

An Israeli mother reports that her five-year-old son comes home from kindergarten at intervals with the announcement that one of the children has a birthday the next day. That makes it a party and he expects to put on his best white blouse.

A few days ago he came home and said Haim was having a birthday. Next day he went off in his white blouse and when his mother came to fetch him she looked around and asked which was Haim with the birthday. The teacher looked a little embarrassed and said:

"Actually, we have been celebrating the birthday of Haim Nahman Bialik.

Ghosts from the Kosygin Feast

BRITIAN, RUSSIA, GERMANY

by Gordon Brook-Shepherd

Gordon Brook-Shepherd of the London Sunday Telegraph says real purpose of Russian Prime Minister's pilgrimage to London was to gain Britain's support in squashing Germany for good.

One toast has been missing among all those drunk during Mr. Kosygin's stay in London: "Absent friends". Yet few top-level diplomatic encounters have been overcast so completely by the shadows of those not in attendance.

Of these shadows, the longest in every sense has been that thrown by Chairman Mao from Peking. Suggestions that the more berserk the Chinese leadership gets the more anxious Mr. Kosygin will become to reach a Vietnam settlement are perhaps over-optimistic. They are certainly over-simplified.

It is the physical threat of Chinese aggression against her Eastern border provinces that Russia fears just as much as the ideological threat to her Communist prestige. In the first context, the continued presence of half a million American troops camped right outside China's southern gates will cause even the most punch-drunk or power-drunk regime in Peking, to hesitate before starting up trouble in the north as well.

Yet in a general sense it is true that Russia, like China, is anxious to avoid a fight on two fronts. One explanation therefore of all Mr. Kosygin's offers last week to kiss and make up in Europe is certainly his desire to keep tension low on his capitalist flank at a time when it is mounting to breaking-point on his Communist one.

But there are several other explanations as well, and this brings us to the second of our "absent friends" - President Johnson. Though Mr. Kosygin may feel in two minds about the huge American garrison in South-East Asia, he is quite clear about the United States' other major overseas garrison in Europe. Last week in London every public utterance he made (and we may presume almost every private one too) was directed to the pursuit of Soviet policies which were laid down in Stalin's day and first spelled out by the Kremlin's other Mr. K more than 10 years ago: to drive the American troops out of Europe and to dismantle N.A.T.O. in the process.

The Russians were playing this game long before General de Gaulle pulled up a chair and took a hand, though there was one revealing passage in Mr. Kosygin's speech in the House of Lords on Thursday which showed how invaluable Gaullist help in this parallel campaign has now become. In an obvious reference to the current withdrawal of N.A.T.O.'s headquarters and military installations from France (to be completed, on the General's orders, by April 1) Mr. Kosygin said: "Still less do we see why the staffs of these military bases which today are moving from one place to another should remain in Europe any longer. In our view it would certainly be much better if they would simply cross the ocean without any intermediate stops."

Much better, of course, for Moscow. America's forces would be withdrawn 3,000 miles across the Atlantic. Russia's (in any matching "disbandment" of the Warsaw Pact) would move less than 300 miles back across the plains of Central Europe. And with the backbone of an American physical involvement removed from Europe, anything that was left of Western ground defences would be as easy to digest as filleted fish. Provided, that is, that West Germany can be reduced to a state of permanent political isolation and permanent military impotence.

Enter here the third of last week's absent friends and the most agitated of all the ghosts at these London banquets - the new German Chancellor, Dr. Kiesinger, or rather his powerful lieutenant, Franz-Josef Strauss. Enter also the real purpose of Mr. Kosygin's propaganda pilgrimage to Westminster.

The most important role Britain can play in the Kremlin's policies is not to help solve the Vietnam crisis, where our function as co-Chairman of the Geneva Conference is, as Mr. Kosygin well knows, a largely ceremonial one out of all proportion to our small effective influence. It is helping Russia to squash Germany for good and all.

This, surely, is the motive underlying his unexpected revival of the proposal for a "treaty of friendship, peaceful co-operation and non-aggression" between Britain and the Soviet Union. In immediately going on to declare that this "would not be spearheaded against any third countries" the normally astute Mr. Kosygin for once betrayed himself.

"Qui s'excuse, s'accuse." Bismarck used to declare that the first thing to ask yourself about any treaty, however harmless it sounded, was "Who is being done down here?" The first potential victim of any Anglo-Soviet treaty today is Germany.

The Russians, like de Gaulle also in this respect, are great ones for geo-politics and the broad sweep of history. They have not forgotten that in the First World War as well as the Second it was the "wing powers" of Europe who combined to contain its restless centre - called the Triple Alliance in Kaiser Wilhelm's day and the Rome-Berlin Axis in Hitler's. Mr. Kosygin's offer

The world of books and letters

GIGANTIC PROJECT: TALMUD ENCYCLOPEDIA

by the CJN literary editor

In 1942, during the darkest period of Jewish history, a great leader in Israel launched a project which became one of the most important publishing efforts in Judaism. The man was Rabbi Meir Bar Ilan, for whom the university in Ramat Gan is named. The project: Talmudic Encyclopedia in Modern Hebrew which, in 36 volumes, will digest the accumulation of 2,000 years of Jewish knowledge and scholarship.

Rabbi Yehoshua Hutner, managing editor of the Talmudic Encyclopedia, last week concluded a visit to Canada in connection with the publication of Volume 12, dedicated to the memory of Toronto's late Rabbi Jacob Gordon, which will appear in April.

In an interview with a reporter of The Canadian Jewish News, Rabbi Hutner related the story of the beginnings of this gigantic project.

The original idea of such an encyclopedia occurred to Rabbi Naftali Zvi Berlin, father of Rabbi Meir Bar Ilan.

Rabbi Naftali Zvi was the famous Rosh Yeshiva of Volozhin. It was in 1892, when the Volozhin Yeshiva was closed by the Czarist government, that the Ntziv (as Rabbi Naftali Zvi was known) said to his small son Meir: "Remember some day to publish an encyclopedia of the Talmud. It is important that such an undertaking be realized by Jews who believe in the Torah and its importance. Otherwise it will be done by incompetent men."

Fifty years later Rabbi Bar Ilan began to work for this project. He established it in Jerusalem; the Talmudic Encyclopedia Institute, now a part of the Emet Rabbi Herzog World Academy.

Immediately Jewish scholars the world over expressed their enthusiasm; they cooperated with Rabbi Bar Ilan in the realization of the project.

The Talmudic Encyclopedia, of which the present editor-in-chief is Rabbi Shlomo Joseph Zevin, covers 2,000 years of Jewish scholarship and 25,000 volumes. Besides that, about 3,000 manuscripts are being studied by the Encyclopedia staff of fifty permanetly employed scholars working in the spacious academy building in Jerusalem.

In order to grasp the importance of this task, Rabbi Hutner explained, one should compare the achievements of the Talmudic Encyclopedia with similar undertakings. For example, the famous American Encyclopedia of Law "Corpus Juris" which covers approximately three centuries, took twenty-eight years to prepare. Other dictionaries of this kind require decades of labor.

Talmudic Encyclopedia already has published 12 volumes in Hebrew (the twelfth sponsored by the Toronto Rabbi Jacob Gordon Memorial Foundation).

Now the Encyclopedia of the Talmud is being translated into English. The appearance of the first volume undoubtedly will be an event in the scholarly world.

To illustrate the scope of the project, one need only note the classification. Every rule, doctrine, principle or concept of halakhic value is explained. Following are examples of classification, explained by Rabbi Hutner:

ENCYCLOPEDIA

Faith and Prayer - Unity of God; Prayer; Benedictions; Kiddush; Habdalah; Hallel; Synagogue; Sefer Torah; Megillah; etc.

Sabbath and Festivals - Sabbath; Abot Melachot (categories of work biblically prohibited); Shebut (categories of activities rabinnically prohibited); Passover; Maror; Arba Kosot; Yom Tob Sheni shel Galuyot (the second day of the festival observed in the Diaspora); Lulab; Fast Days; Hanukkah; Purim; etc.

Temple and Priest - The Temple; The Altar; Sacrifices; Water Libation; Azazel; Omer; Bikurim; Ma'aser Sheni (the second Tithe) Tibel (produce from which the priestly or levitical dues have not been appropriated); Mishmar (contingent of priests and Levites on duty at the Temple); Urim and Tummim; etc.

Marital Relations - Kidushin; Huppah; Yibbum; Gerushin (laws pertaining to divorce); Ketubah D'irkesa (a Ketubah issued to replace a lost one); Mezonot (support of wife and children); etc.

Property and Litigation - Possession: Acquisition; Kinyan Perot (right to usufruct); Adverse Possession; Agency; Bailment; Contracts; etc.

Damages - Adam Hamazik (defendant in torts); Boshet (indemnity for shame suffered by plaintiff); Rippuy (indemnity for medical expenses incurred by plaintiff); Hezzek She'eno Nikkar (damage undiscernable in the object itself); etc.

Legal Institutions - Ab Bet Din (President of the Court); Dayyan (Judge); Sanhedrin; etc.

Israel and Eretz Israel - The Love of Israel; Eretz Israel; Building of Eretz Israel; Jerusalem; Shemittah (the Sabbatical year); Shemittat Kesaphim (cancellation of monetary debts); Yobel (the year of Jubilee); etc.

Norms and Doctrines - Taryag Mitzwot (the six hundred and thirteen commandments); Shelosh Esre Middot (the thirteen rules by which the Torah is interpreted); Kelal Uphrat (general and particular); Analogy; etc.

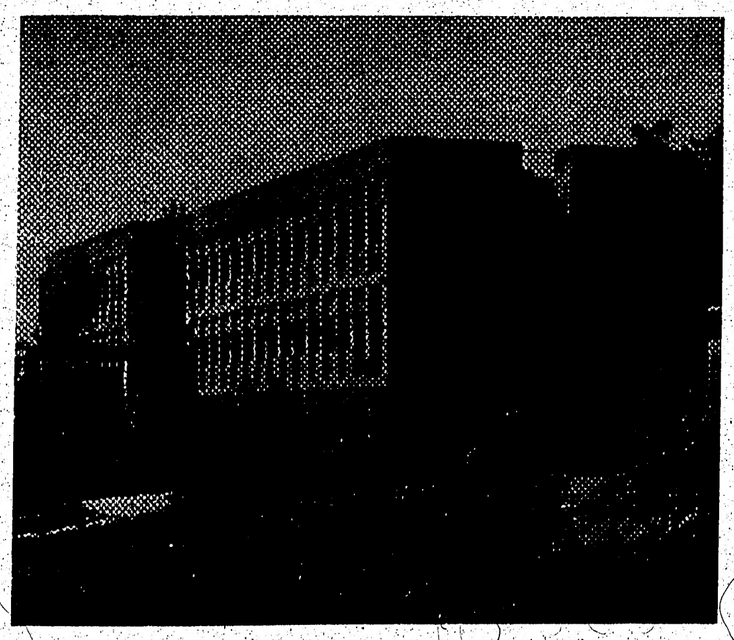
Of special interest is the Treatment of the Subject Matter. Says Rabbi Hutner:

"The Encyclopedia discusses with equal thoroughness every subject in general and in particular, each under its own heading and sub-heading. Thus, while giving a coherently integrated exposition to each subject as a whole, the derivative subjects are also treated separately. E.g., under the general heading of Abedah (lost article) all legal matter pertaining to lost articles is included, while the problems of Hashaba: Abedah (restitution of the lost article), Simanim (identification of the article), Abedah Mida'at (intentional loss) and similar problems, come under separate headings. Similarly, the article of Edut (testimony) will not preclude separate treatment of the questions of false witnesses, disqualified witnesses, single witness, etc.

"There are, moreover, certain subjects which by their very nature must be discussed twice, once en passant, within the major subjects to which they are related, and again in greater detail under their own respective captions. Thus, the general theme of Bet Hamikdash will of necessity refer to Ezrat Kohanim (priests' compartment), Lishkat Palhedrin (counsellors' chamber), Lishkat Hanezirim, Mizbeah, Ulam, etc., while the treatment of these auxiliary subjects will be found in their respective alphabetical order. The same procedure applies to such general themes as Benedictions, Festivals, Sacrifices and Abot Nezikin (the principal actionable injuries or damages in torts) vis-a-vis the individual subjects which they comprise."

* * * *

This is, in brief, the story of the Talmudic Encyclopedia.



TALMUDIC ENCYCLOPEDIA BUILDING IN "EMET" HERZOG WORLD ACADEMY
Bait Vegan (opp. Mt. Herzl) Jerusalem

Sermon of the week

THE "MODERN CHOICE

Is living the good Jewish life more difficult today than in the past? Millions of committed Jews world over wrestle with this problem. Some look back longingly to the days when such problems did not exist. Once everyone (except those who deliberately apostasised) lived in an all-embracing and total Jewish environment. Judaism was then a way of life which brooked no challenge, and lived hermetically sealed off from the rest of the world.

Such a view of pre-modern Jewish life is both romantic and reactionary.

It is romantic, because the present hindsight of history tinges the harsh colours of past reality with a warm overglow of nostalgia not warranted by the facts. Even under the most favourable conditions, except in such rare exceptions as a Golden Age of Spain, or a Renaissance Italy, our forbears were less accepted than tolerated in their lands of adoption.

The present situation of being accepted as a Jew in a secular civilisation, the gift of emancipation rather than a Jewish goal achieved, places the modern Jew in an unparalleled and unprecedented historical situation. Never before, not even under the Greeks or the Romans, have Jews ever enjoyed such political freedom.

It is reactionary, because such a viewpoint automatically stigmatises the modern condition of living voluntarily as a Jew in a democratic state as a second class condition, not the ideal. The ideal, presumably, would be a situation in which the Jew would have no alternative to being a Jew. It is the notion that Jews no longer have to be Jews which irritates the reactionary.

True, there is antisemitism: yet there is also the unquestioned possibility in the long run of complete personal assimilation. In the pre-modern period the only alternative to Judaism was Christianity, never the free possibility of choosing neither.

We Jews should have learned from Exodus at least one thing: that God reveals Himself in and through freedom. A state of affairs where more rather than less freedom is available to the modern Jew cannot possibly violate God's intentions for us. It can only make our options more important and our responsibility for choosing more serious.

If, then, living the good Jewish life is more difficult today, it is also more rewarding. This is not merely a question of "one glimpse of it within the Tavern caught Better in the Temple lost outright"; for modern life is no more exclusively a Tavern than pre-modern life was exclusively a Temple.

It is more rewarding because, despite the anxiety of striving to make the right choices for oneself and others, the spiritual stakes are patently so much higher. No one has to be a Jew anymore. The collective may not assimilate. The individual can. No one can stop him.

For the first time in Jewish history the individual Jew, with other possible options, can nevertheless choose to love God with all his heart, soul and might. If we can fearlessly and courageously fulfill our obligations here we shall have no reason to be ashamed or confounded.

• BOURGUIBA JR. ATTACKS NASSER ON ISRAEL •

Rome (JCNS) - "The method of threatening war (against Israel) has become in practice a system in which to establish the supremacy of Egypt over the other Arab countries, and a perennial way of blackmailing that part of the world which wants peace", according to Mr. Habib Bourguiba Jnr., the Tunisian Foreign Minister, and son of President Bourguiba.

In an interview with the influential Italian weekly magazine "L'Europeo", President Bourguiba himself explained "why I hate ideologies". But the most interesting part of the interview is that the Tunisian President entrusted his son with the task of outlining his country's attitude towards Israel and the Israeli-Arab conflict in replying to questions by the Italian magazine.

Referring to this conflict, Mr. Bourguiba Jrn., said: "We have learned the lessons (of the conflict) from our experience. Nasser says that the Israeli question is to be solved by force. But the Arab countries have shown they do not possess such force. They did not have it in 1948, and they did not have it in 1956".

Then he went on to suggest how to arrive at a peaceful solution of the conflict. "It is necessary to change methods in order to eliminate a constant threat to world peace. Our proposal is to return to the 1947 United Nations Partition Resolution. It is at least a basis for discussion, to get out of the deadlock in which the Arabs have locked themselves".

After saying that he shared the feeling of injustice caused by the presence of foreigners (in Palestine) who took over land from the Arab inhabitants, he added:

"However, we cannot justify the fact that in the name of Arab solidarity against Israel, and with no possibility of attacking it, one should wage war on the Yemen and attack Jordan, or that one should stage a radio campaign against Tunisia, guilty only of seeking a peaceful solution".

Boy Stabs Himself; Refuses to Leave Israel

Jerusalem (JCNS) - A 17-year-old boy, David Protter, of Johannesburg, shouted "I don't wont to return to South Africa" and stabbed himself in the stomach as he was boarding a bus outside his hotel here at the end of a ten-week visit to Israel.

The boy was taken to hospital but was later discharged when it was found that the wound was only superficial. The boy came to Israel as a member of a group attending a Jewish Agency winter institute and the bus was waiting to take the party to Lydda airport to join an aircraft for South Africa. Police looked after the boy overnight and returned him to the Agency's care.

NUCLEAR SCHOOL FOR NEGEV

Tel Aviv (JCNS) - Twenty-six students are already receiving instructions at a technical school opened last week by the Labour Minister Yigal Allon, at the Centre for Nuclear Research in the Negev.

The students will have access during their two-year course to the reactor and laboratories at the Centre.

CONFERS WITH ISRAEL'S CHIEF RABBI – Rabbi Dr. Stuart E. Rosenberg of Toronto, during his visit last week to Hechal Shlomo in Jerusalem, the seat of Israel's chief rabbinate, conferring with Ashkenazic Chief Rabbi Yehuda Isser Unterman.

The Chief Rabbi transmitted a special message to Toronto Jewry through Dr. Rosenberg, asking the community to stand by in this hour of need.

Israel Plans busy 1967 Program

EXPECTS RECORD TOURIST YEAR

Abusy program has been planned for 1967 by officials of Israel's Ministry of Tourism, aiming for the 10th consecutive year of increase in tourism. (In Toronto the well known Aufgang Travel Bureau Ltd. has made arrangements to accommodate tourists who wish to participate in the unusual program for 1967.)

For the first ten months of 1966, 298,313 tourists came to Israel, an increase of 12.6% over the January-October period of 1965. A record total of about 330,000 tourists are expected for the full 12 months of 1966.

The combination of Biblical sites and 20th-century modernity undoubtedly attracts many visitors to this land, which has been called a kaleidoscope of history, nature, humanity, culture and religion. Israel is a country in a great hurry to catch up with and keep abreast of the western world. And in the sands of the Negev desert, where the Patriarchs grazed their flocks, the Bedouin still roam - but new cities are mushrooming and industrial installations spring up virtually overnight.

And wherever one goes in Israel, one rediscovers that this is, indeed, the Land of the Bible. But it is also the land of sun and fun to members of the French clubs at Achziv and Ashkelon, and to the frolicking Scandinavians at Natanya and Eilat.

During 1967, foreign visitors will be able to see the latest and best in Israel fashions during the Israel Fashion Week - or they may attend an International Bridge Congress in March.

If you're interested in agriculture, hydrology, life assurance medicine, the frontiers of the Roman Empire - you'll find that specialists in these fields will be convening in Israel during 1967.

Flower lovers will be able to study thousands of plants at the Annual International Flower Exhibition at Haifa in April. And music-lovers may feast on the Ein Gev Music Festival in April and the Zimrya (6th World Assembly of Choirs) in July. During July and August, the annual Israel Festival will delight many visitors from abroad, with a program of internationally-known artists.

Incidentally, no less a towering figure in music than Igor Stravinsky paid an extraordinary compliment to the Israel Festival over - unbelievably - the Russian radio and television network. Speaking in Moscow in 1965, Maestro Stravinsky was asked about his plans - and told a nationwide audience of startled Russians that he had composed an opus on a Biblical theme, "Sacrifice of Isaac", which was dedicated to the people of Israel. The work was performed by Stravinsky at the Israel Festival months later, and a condition attached to its performance is that it may be sung only in Hebrew.

Art-lovers are welcome all year around at Israel's many fine galleries in Tel Aviv, Jerusalem and Haifa - and in the land's many museums, in the larger cities and even in kibbutzim.

The Independence Day festivities in Israel (May 15 in 1967) is a stellar attraction for visitors, as are the religious festivals commemorating joyous events in Jewish history. Purim will take place on March 26 in 1967 - and Simchat Torah (marking the giving of Israel's religious laws) on October 26.

During the last days of the year, the victories of the Maccabeans will be commemorated from one end of Israel to the other, in cities, towns and farms by giant menorahs (candelabras) atop homes, buildings, water towers, etc.

histadrut development foundation

100 Million Dollars

Can you afford to donate such a large sum of money to the Israel Histadrut Campaign? If you can and are willing to do so over the next decade, then you will have solved a problem which the Histadrut is facing. It is, simply put, how to expand Histadrut's mutual aid program to keep pace with the increasing demands of an expanding population in the Jewish state.

Perhaps you cannot afford this tremendous sum by yourself, but where there is a will there is a way, and that's exactly what the Canadian Histadrut Development Foundation is all about.

This Foundation has been set up as a medium for mobilizing a capital fund to accrue to Israel in the years to come. While much attention is given to Israel's immediate requirements which our various fund raising institutions endeavour to meet, little thought is shown to the huge mortgage Israel's future generations will have to bear. All those loans, bond sales, and other long term commitments have got to be repaid.

The Histadrut Foundation Capital Fund will help offset this mortgage by developing a fund by way of bequests, assignment of life insurance, transfer of Israel Bonds, living legacies, transfer of properties or securities, etc., all or any of which offer substantial tax advantages and little or no outlay of cash whatsoever.

So can you leave the Histadrut something in your will? Better still, you realize you want to, but you would like to bear witness to the good you are doing before you reach 120 years of age. So the Histadrut Development Foundation provides the means to realize this wish. In recognition of such a charitable endowment for the benefit of Histadrut welfare in Israel, the Canadian Histadrut Development Foundation will perpetuate your name or the name of your designee with an attractive living project in Israel, commensurate with the amount of the endowment. You can have the nachas of having your name linked with the Jewish homeland during your own lifetime. Do you want to endow a medical institution, a synagogue, a vocational school, a sports centre, an old age home, or a cultural centre in your name? Arrangements can be made today to erect any one of these much needed institutions by Histadrut. It only requires a stroke of your pen. Why not think about it.

You may not be a Rothchild or even a Rockefeller, but you can give a new interpretation to those immortal words of Herzl — "If you will it is no fable."

So please "will it" to the Histadrut Development Foundation. For information — contact your Histadrut office at 14 Viewmount Ave., 787-0264.

Theater In Toronto:

SYLVIA SAVES BEEBEE

by Barbara I. Pearl

Aside from the fact that William Snyder's, The Days and Nights of Beebee Fenstermaker, is jampacked with emotion, there is very little to duscuss.

As the drama unfolds, one feels as though one is dissecting a human being, doing something naughty in public. It is Sylvia Lennick who lifts the dull plot from its maudlin mire and gives the character of Beebee a personality.

At its best, it is not a pretty sight to see a young girl, on her own in a big city and chockful of ambition, gradually mature into a frustrated nonentity.

Beebee Fenstermaker starts out being so sure of herself. She can write, she can act, she can paint, she can sing--she can set the world on fire.

Meanwhile the prosaic thought of living cannot be ignored. Beebee refuses to admit defeat, to go home. She gets a nine-to-five office job to tide her over.

Trouble is, the nine-to-five job is all that's left her through the years.

Oh, Beebee tries. Her boyfriend Ed (convincingly porrayed by Daniel MacDonald), who is her chief reason for earning a livelihood, attempts to encourage her in his own psycho-analytical manner. But Beebee's incessant, non-stop talk--a sign of insecurity--ultimately drives Ed way.

Young Bob (whom William Haslett plays with such freshness), a bumpkin from a hick town, becomes a replacement. And with that, the future of Beebee Fenstermaker is left to one's imagination.

As has been pointed out, Sylvia Lennick takes a nondescript character and gives it life. Beebee's fluctuating emotions, her transformation from young hopeful to disillusioned maturity could not have been more beautifully expressed.

Not to forget--in the background are Beebee's mother and two aunts, all engrossed in their own petty bickerings. And there's Nettie Joe, ordinary in Beebee's estimation. But Nettie Joe (Pat Moffatt) lives the life Beebee eventually desires--that of simple housewife with a husband to adore.

Dora Dainton plays a typical mother, anxious for her daughter yet reluctant to domineer.

We loved Jack Merigold's comical expressions in his role of job interviewer.

The Days and Nights of Beebee Fenstermaker is being performed at the Hydro Theater. It's worth seeing if only for Sylvia Lennick's beautiful performance and Jack Merigold's direction.

ZANY IN MAD SHOW – Jerry Matz, who appears in The Mad Show, at Toronto's Royal Alexandra Theater February 27th through March 4th.

DELIGHTFUL REVIVAL – A scene from Leonard Spigelgass', Dear Me, The Sky Is Falling, which Toronto's Temple Sinai, Stage 210, is presenting at the Temple for five evenings: Saturday, February 18th and 25th; Sunday, February 19th and 26th; Wednesday, February 22nd.

The comedy revolves around a Jewish family facing many complicated and true to life situations. It is directed by actor–director Adam Ludwig. Performances at 8:30 P.M. sharp.

FRYE TALKS

During Montreal Stopover

by V. D. Michelson

It requires courage to desert the bright lights of Broadway when, after years of struggle, one has made the grade on stage, in production, radio and television. That is what Montreal born Peter Frye did in 1949 after he had accepted a year-old invitation to visit Israel. Now on a Sabbatical in Montreal from the University of Tel Aviv, Peter and I chatted the other day.

"As soon as I set foot on Israeli soil", he told me, "I knew I had come home -- and this feeling was only intensified when I started work as a stage director. Theater in Israel is a vibrant and living thing; it is tremendously rewarding to work at it."

Frye, bearded, burly and looking less than his 52 years, was born in 1914 and educated in Montreal. He made his stage debut at the age of 13, appearing in Yiddish plays with the late Joe Gordon. He appeared on the English stage at 16, featured in shows with the YMHA Players under the direction of Rupert Caplan who later became a top producer for the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation (and retired recently).

By this time he already had decided upon the stage as a career. When he was 18 he went to New York. The depression was still on and the theater felt the pinch as much as any other branch of activity. There followed all sorts of disappointment, struggle and even privation until, two years later, he had his first Broadway part. Even then it was not easy sailing. But dogged perseverance and some first rate performances brought reward; he found regular jobs with CBS and NBC radio, later with CBS television.

A DELICATE BALANCE

Direct from a successful run on Broadway, Edward Albee's A Delicate Balance plays at O'Keefe Center for two weeks commencing Mon., March 6th, under the aegis of Theater 1967 (Richard Barr and Clinton Wilder).

The original stars head the cast: Jessica Tandy; Hume Cronyn; Rosemary Murphy. Featured are Philip Bourneuf, Dortha Duckworth and Kathleen Maguire. They have been directed by Alan Schneider who performed similar stints on behalf of all Albee's Broadway plays including Who's Afraid of Virginia Woolf?"

NEW MUSICAL REVUE

The Mad Show, a new musical revue based on Mad magazine, called "the best musical of the year on or off Broadway" by Newsweek magazine, opened in Chicago on October 5, 1966, to rave reviews. Beginning Monday it will be performed at the Royal Alex through Saturday, March 11th.

Cast includes a mad company of six: Jay Devlin; Bill Gerber; Lew Horn; Jerry Matz; Barbara Rubenstein; Ellen Travolta.

ENTERTAINMENT GALORE

On Sunday, February 26th, 8:15 p.m., on Glendon Campus, York University, the Glendon Film Society presents The Joker.

At 8:30 that same evening, in Burton Auditorium, the film, Black Orpheus, will be featured along with the short, L'Autre Face De La Lune.

FINAL PRESENTATION

The final play to be presented by the Centre for the Study of Drama at Hart House Theatre is August Strindberg's The Father, now being performed through Saturday, March 4th. David Garnder is guest director.

Though written in 1887, The Father is contemporary in its attitudes. It is a difficult and tragic play which basically shows the psychological battles of the two sexes.

This tragedy of matrimonial life is the companion play to The Dance of Death performed last summer at the Stratford Shakesperean Festival.

Sets and costumes are designed by Martha Mann.

Cast includes Rex Southgate, Clare Coulter, Joy Tepperman, Franz Robinow, James Bradford, Eleanor Beecroft, Nicholas Pashley, Geza Kovacs, Margaret Keith.

SPRING FESTIVAL

The Canadian Junior Ballet Auxiliary will hold its annual Spring Festival and Bazaar on Friday evening, March 10th, at Armour Hgts. Public School. The Junior Ballet Company is under the direction of Mme. Diana Jablokova-Vorps.

FEATURED ACTS

The Four Aces are appearing at the Hook and Ladder Club of the Beverly Hills Motor Hotel.

Beginning Monday, March 6th, Los Trobadores de Espana will be the featured act. In the revue are eleven entertainers who came to America from Spain four years ago.

FINAL WEEKEND

This is the final weekend the Moe Koffman Quartet will perform at George's Spaghetti House prior to Moe's concert engagement which will take him around the world. Featured for the first time is his new sound innovation on his twin electric saxophones.

Upstairs in the Castle is Jeri Adams who plays the piano and sings in a most engaging manner.

VISITS JEWISH COMMUNITY

West Berlin (JCNS) The West German President, Heinrich Luebke, and his wife paid a visit to the West Berlin Jewish community last week. They were welcomed at the community centre by Heinz Galinski, the president of the community, which now numbers about 6,000.

The President and his wife later attended a class at the Jewish Religion School, and laid a wreath at the memorial for Jewish victims of Nazi persecution in the courtyard of the communal centre.

Subsidy for Zim

Haifa, (JCNS) - Management and publicity expenditure of the Zim Navigation Company in 1967 will be $1,200,000 less than in 1966 Michael Tsur, the board chairman, has announced in Haifa.

He said there would be economies by closing down more passenger offices abroad, reducing overseas staff by 20 and more "modest" allowances.

the lively arts

by D. Cohn

* The selected poems of Mendel Lipshitz, Yiddish poet living in Moscow, will be published between April and June of this year. The edition will run to 5,000 copies, according to the announcement of the impending publication appearing in the Soviet Weekly, New Books in the USSR.

* The creation in Israel of a single broadcasting authority, to which both the radio and the television services will be subordinated, is to be approved soon by the Israeli Cabinet, following the recommendation of the Minister of Information, Israel Galili. Co. El'ad Peled was nominated as co-ordinator of the TV programs. He is expected to be appointed director of the new authority in charge of radio and television.

TV programs are planned to start in Israel at the end of next year. At present an educational service only is broadcast.

Hanoch Givton, director of Kol Israel, is reported to have threatened to resign in protest against the new nomination. Relations between the government and a group of senior officials of Kol Israel, including Givton, are believed to have been strained for some time.

* Jews and Music in the Soviet Union was the subject of a talk, illustrated with recording by Martin Lawrence, bass baritone, in London.

Referring to his recent visit to the Soviet Union as a council member of the Society for Cultural Relations with the USSR, Lawrence stated that in Tallin (Estonia) he had attended a Sholem Aleichem 50th anniversary celebration at the Workers' Palace. Program was printed in Yiddish, Estonian and Russian.

During the interval he was surrounded by members of the audience, numbering about 500, who insisted on his singing. When the second half of the program began, he sang in Yiddish.

From Tallin he went to Vilna where he attended the tenth anniversary celebration of the Vilna Jewish collective and listened to a choir of eighty voices. A play was performed in Yiddish; soloists sang in Yiddish; the function concluded with Hava Nagila.

* Zero Mostel's latest film role is as an irrascible, hilarious, drunken Russian prince in the forthcoming Warner Bros. comedy, Great Catherine.

* Peter Ustinov flew into Cotonou (Dahomey, West Africa) from Paris for one day's work in MGM's The Comedians. He made the fifteen-hour 4,000 mile trip to appear in several important scenes that could not be duplicated either in the Paris studio or Nice locations that follow the unit's five-weeks filming in West Africa.

* Ephraim Kishon's Ervinke is probably one of the best known personalities in Israel. Kishon started to write about him about 15 or 16 years ago and now the thousands who have chortled over his machinations and artful wiles in print can see him as personified by Haim Topol.

Kishon describes it as a "satirical comedy" poking fun at various aspects of life in Israel, bureaucracy, inefficiency, the petit-burgeois mania for show such as grandiose bar mitzvas. Ervinke is a sabra, a "likeable crook".

Haim Topol has just the right physical makeup for Ervinke.

Others of the cast are Yossi Banai, Avner Hiskaihu, Shai Ophir, Shraga Friedman, Edna Fliedel, Elisheva Michaeli and the Pale Tracker Trio.

Ervinke is in Hebrew and will have English and French sub-titles for its presentation overseas.

* In playing the current version of Otto Frank in The Diary of Anne Frank, Max von Sydow has done his first television role since 1958. Tall, austere, but capable of mammoth smiles, he found New York exciting but sensed it was "a tough city. The pace is so much faster. Television work is hectic too, but actually very disciplined."

Of all the participants in the telecast, von Sydow perhaps had the most contact with the conditions which produced the "Diary". As a schoolboy in a folk dance group, he had toured centers set up by the Swedish Red Cross for Polish concentration camp victims right after the war. "In Malmo they had the centers all over. When the hospitals were full, they set up beds in the auditoriums and school gymnasiums. For many of the victims the journey from the concentration camps was too much and they died en route. Now there are rows and rows of tombstones in Swedish cemeteries with Polish names and the dates of death are all perhaps within a week.

"But we danced for them and learned their national anthem and sang that. They were fantastically appreciative. They had come directly out of hell into a place where there was hope again, where people tried to heal them and give them food. I was just a kid, of course, but it was an experience I'll not forget. I've never seen such a happy audience."

RECOGNIZE HIM SANS BEARD? Gila Almagor and Haim Topol in, Ervinke, Ephraim Kishon's newest film. Topol appears without his usual beard, looking and acting his age.

New Technion Chairman

Haifa (JCNS) - Professor Sydney Goldstein, a British-born and educated professor and applied mathematics at Harvard University, has been elected chairman of the Technion's board of governors.

Between 1951 and 1955 Professor Goldstein was vice-president of the Technion, when his influence in organising the institution was far reaching.

His immense experience of academic administration and his renown as a teacher helped to shape the Technion into a modern institution of learning, whose graduates could hold their own anywhere in the world. He also assisted in drawing up the Technion's constitution and regulations.

A graduate of Cambridge, Professor Goldstein, who is 64, has had many honours conferred on him. During the Second World War he made a great contribution to British aircraft production. He has been a Technion governor since 1964.

Travel and Adventure

DOWN UNDER

by Greville Janner

The first of two articles on Australian Jewry today. Mr. Janner, a former president of the Cambridge Union is founder and chairman of the Bridge and honorary secretary of the Association for Jewish youth.

The bulk of Australia's Jews live in Sydney and Melbourne. According to the "Jewish Year Book", the former has a Jewish population of about 28,000 the latter of about 34,000. But the difference between the two communities is startling. Consider their Jewish day schools.

Melbourne boasts one of the largest and most remarkable Jewish day schools in the world. Mount Scopus College has some 1,500 pupils, covering primary and secondary education for boys and girls. Add the flourishing Yeshiva and Beth Rivkah, Moriah College, Mizrachi's Yavneh and the Zionist Bialik and you have about 40 percent of the community's children attending Jewish day schools.

What, then, of Sydney? Moriah College has about 250 pupils and the King David School about 80.

"Why", I asked, in both cities, "is there this difference"?

Sydney, some say, is a lazy city because it is bathed in too much sunshine. Comes the end of the day or the start of the weekend, and Bondi Beach beckons. Instead of gathering in clubs or centres, Jewish youth collects on a part of the beach which has been nicknamed "Little Jerusalem".

Another (and more plausible) explanation lies in the origins of the communities. Many Jews from Eastern Europe settled in Melbourne, formed congregations and communal institutions. Sydney, on the other hand, was more a gathering ground for Central European Jews who did not produce the same communal warmth.

Then there's leadership. Both cities have older leaders of calibre and experience. But Melbourne is blessed with more young men prepared to devote their time, energy and money to communal affairs. The reasons why there are fewer young leaders in Sydney provide fertile soil for argument in both cities.

In fact, neither community is short of controversy. In Sydney, argument rages over the correct interpretation of the Public Instruction Act, 1880. This law provides for free and secular education in Australian schools. But the syllabus recently introduced in New South Wales, allegedly under pressure from the Anglican clergy, provides for religious education in State schools as a part of the social studies syllabus.

Minorities are entitled to withdraw their children. But withdrawal is usually to corridors or other classrooms. Should the community bring a test case to challenge, the syllabus as contrary to the Public Instruction Act? Would the resultant publicity cause harm? The battle is no more over within the community than outside it.

Argument in Melbourne is on an even sadder subject. Probably due to a series of misunderstandings, the Jewish community withdrew its support of an inter-denominational centre at Monash University - named after Australia's most famous Jewish soldier, but not a Jewish foundation. The fate of the organisation hangs in the balance and disunity rages, with much deplorable publicity.

Sometimes the disarray shows equally clearly in the community's greatest triumph - its day school movement. Schools spring up with similar ideologies and little to distinguish between them except their size and their sponsors - and then compete for communal funds.

"But at least they build substantial and successful schools," says the visitor. "Why are they so rare in Sydney?"

Some allege that their Jewish schools do not give as good a secular education as other denominational schools, which are more fashionable. They do not attract either the pupils or the money and so they cannot attract more of the best teachers, improve their syllabus and become fashionable.

Meanwhile, the existing schools soldier resolutely on. And those parents I met who send their children to these schools seem satisfied with the results.

In Melbourne it is far more fashionable to send your child to a Jewish school. Many top families in the community do so. The uncharitable maintain that the greatest asset of the Melbourne Jewish schools was, and remains, a shortage of places for Jews in other schools.

"Nonsense", retorts the Melbourne Jew. "The standard of secular education in our schools is as high as in any other. Our children get a Jewish education into the bargain. And there's no reason to send them anywhere else".

One evening in Sydney I asked to see some sort of youth activity. A squash match was the only suggestion. There is no Jewish youth club or centre as these are understood in Britain. The Central Synagogue has some youth rooms, but apparently no youth group to go into them. The Great Synagogue and some others have youth groups of fluctuating strength, but a lack of concentrated or professional activity. But, apart from sport, I gathered that the Anglo-Jewish craze of "party crashing" has found its way "down under" as the foremost pastime for the Jewish youth.

Melbourne boasts a Beth Habonim and active Zionist youth groups (although, I was told, on the wane). It has also built a magnificent and flourishing sports centre - swimming pool (heated up to a satisfying 85 degs.), weight-lifting room of Olympic standard, squash courts, judo and wrestling room, and large hall. It is entirely Jewish in membership but entirely sporting in character.

One communal venture which ought to produce more praise than it does, has originated in Sydney. It is a periodical called "the Bridge" containing substantial articles of Jewish interest. It circulates throughout Australia - but alas, neither widely nor swiftly. The two complex communities of Sydney and Melbourne, as well as the smaller communities in Perth, Adelaide, Brisbane, Canberra and elsewhere, should welcome such a useful publication. On the whole, they don't.

BEN GURION WOULD HEAD CABINET WITH HERUT

Beersheba, Israel. - David Ben-Gurion declared here last week that if asked to form a government he would see no reason not to include Herut in a new cabinet.

Speaking at a public meeting called to discuss electoral reform, the former Premier and one of the country's most out-spoken opponents of the Herut Movement, declared that his statement was prompted by Herut's dropping of its platform plank dealing with the "integrity of the father-land." Mr. Ben-Gurion said that this stand, if pursued to its logical end, inevitably meant war with the Arabs, and he had all along believed in peace.

As to electoral reform, he stated that he had never headed a government whose composition reflected the wishes of the electorate. This was because the votors had never been given the opportunity to decide on the type of government they wanted.

He then explained his plans to establish a non-partisan list which would contest the next elections on an electoral reform plank.

ISRAEL'S NEWEST POLITICAL SCANDAL: THE "AFFAIRE BUL", — Bul means stamp in Hebrew. It is the name of Israel's sensational weekly. Editors, Samuel Mor and Maxim Gilan, were sentenced in camera to 1 year prison. According to Israeli sources they divulged military secrets. Above is photo of the cover of the Israeli weekly for December 11, 1966. Starred photo of Yigal Allon, Israel's Minister of Labor, is on top left. Major headline asks "Yigal Allon Prime Minister" — raising question of ouster of Premier Levi Eshkol. "Scoop!" is starred, bottom right, mentioning Israeli ties with French Intelligence.

ISAAC HAMLIN DIES

Tel Aviv - The death occurred in Tel Aviv last Thursday of Isaac Hamlin, head of the Farband House in this city which bears his name. He was 75. The funeral took place on Sunday. His two sons came from the U.S. to participate in the funeral. He is also survived by his wife.

Hamlin was secretary - general of the Histadrut Campaign in America for over 30 years, during which period it raised $30m. to help the Histadrut establish social projects in this country. He settled here in 1956. The Farband House, which he directed, was built by this pro-Zionist organization of Jewish workers in the U.S.

A native of Komarin, in White Russia, Hamlin settled to the U.S. in 1909, after having served a term in a Russian jail for his Zionist activity. He was named national secretary of Poalei Zion in the U.S. in 1921. He was a delegate to most Zionist Congresses since 1925.

Britain-Israel Visa Agreement

Jerusalem (JCNS) - Israelis will be able to visit Britain without a visa from March 15. However, the immigration authorities at ports of entry in Britain retain the right to refuse entry and they will also decide how long a visitor can stay.

This was announced in Jerusalem last week after Mr. Abba Eban, the Israeli Foreign Minister, and Mr. Michael Hadow, the British Ambassador, had exchanged the instruments of ratification of the agreement.

The agreement formally frees British visitors from obtaining a visa before going to Israel, although in practice they have not done so for sometime, being allowed entry automatically on arrival. arrival.

HUMAN RELATIONS

'Childish' Girl Friend

QUESTION: Two months ago I met a girl whom I liked immediately. She is 24 and I am 32. We are of the same religion, and it soon became obvious that we are very much alike in our tastes and ideas. We both enjoy the arts, and our concepts of life and society are similar.

Drawn by her pretty face, I became very attached to her. She looks quite young. Her figure is not too good, but not bad. In addition to my warm feelings for her, I do not wish to be alone anymore. But she says she does not feel the way I do. She would like to date me casually.

The girl comes from a poor home, but she has a college degree. Money is very meaningful to her. She would like to be taller. She is 5-foot. Her father is short; I am taller. But it appears that she likes much taller men.

I have a good profession and my family is comfortable. She loves herself, likes to hear compliments and acts childish sometimes. She wants to be guided, but has a strong will.

I am sure I have qualities and features which make me attractive to her. When I mentioned marriage in due time, she said "never" with me.

We decided not to see each other for three weeks. Could there be a happy union, or is it "never"?

ANSWER: Although it would be presumptuous to try to predict the outcome of a relationship like this one and to say "never", the chances for any satisfactory future with this girl do not appear to be very good.

A wish or a decision to get married does not always signify that the individual is ready for marriage. Many times there are "trials" in such circumstances. Two or three people are considered seriously, but on closer scrutiny fail to have all of the desired or required traits, or else possess too many undesirable characteristics.

It is generally agreed that where a couple have common interests, similar social, religious and educational backgrounds, and fairly similar goals, it makes for an easier adjustment in marriage. When the young couple bring out the best in each other, it is also a good sign. This pertains to work, friendship and family relationships.

All the interests that you have in common with this young woman would make for a good friendship, or a kindly brother-sister relationship. But she is still engaged in a search to find herself, more than to find a man to love and marry. The childishness you note is undoubtedly there.

As for yourself, your desire not to be alone any more is not enough of a motivation for marriage. Nor is the wish for company and to have someone around to live with a sign of readiness for real love.

People say, "Absence makes the heart grow fonder," and usually mean it in the sense that only when separated do people really begin to appreciate each other. In this context, the statement is psychologically untrue and would be an unsound basis for determining whether one is in love, or for allowing a long separation to take place in order to make love grow.

You want a woman who is grown up psychologically as well as physically and chronologically, and not one who is adult in years but childish in behavior and outlook.

Peter Frye Tells His Own Story

Here and there film work presented itself but, reminisced Peter somewhat ruefully, nearly all film work in those days was in Hollywood; New York at that time did not figure at the production end of the film indsutry to the extent that it does today.

In 1948 came the invitation to come to Israel to direct. This followed as a result of his very successful direction a year before of Shylock-'47, the controversial analysis-adaptation of Shakespeare's famous play. This production--in which he directed some actors who had appeared with the Habima Players and others from Vilna and Grodno--was under the auspices of the Jewish Theological Seminary of New York.

His arrival in Israel in March, 1949, made him the first foreign director there since 1938. He scored an immediate success, directing the Kameri Players in three smash hits.

He continued in the theater proper until eight years ago when a strong body of opinion felt the time had come for the professional training of actors within an academic framework. Eventually this led to the establishment at the Tel Aviv University of a theater workshop headed by Peter Frye.

He is intensely interested in the screen as a medium and is negotiating at present arrangements and finance for an epic-spectacular, Solomon and Sheba. Both the Israeli and Abyssinian governments have expressed interest in the project which also will have outside financial backing. Before coming here, Frye visited Addis Ababa for discussion with Haile Selassie.

His first love, however, is the stage. He is enthusiastic about the state of theater in Israel and of its potential but is a bit worried about the pending introduction of television. This, he believes, could affect live show attendances.

Knowing the penchant among immigrants to Israel for dropping their Western names in favor of Hebrew equivalents, I asked him why he had retained the name, Frye. Was it, I asked, that he hesitated to discard a name which already carried some weight in theater in the United States?

He laughed and said, "That is only partly so. I kept the name because of the way I originally got it." He continued that his father's name was Prebludha, a Ukrainian word meaning "one who loses his way and arrives by wandering."

Peter's father came to America in 1906 at the age of 16, a refugee from the Revolution of 1905. The immigration official at Ellis Island was incapable of spelling the name, Prebludha. On being told to choose another name, his father acted on the suggestion of the man in the queue behind him; he became Friedemann.

Soon afterwards Friedemann moved to Canada and Anglicized the spelling of his name. Several years later he married and, in 1914, Pincus Friedman was born.

Pincus Friedman? This was still a long way from Peter Frye. The first half of the change came when, as a small boy, he occupied a public bed in a Montreal hospital. A good natured but leg-pulling Cockney fellow-patient found the name Pincus inordinately funny and decided to call him Peter. This the youngster liked; he became Peter Friedman.

As a teenager, already burning with ambition to be an actor, he mused about a stage name. In the family's kitchen one cold winter's night, he had an inspiration. His mother was making cocoa for the family. He glanced at the tin in her hand; the brand was Fry's.

His mind was made up. He would be Peter Fry. No, that would be too close a copy of another name. He would avoid this closeness by adding an "e"; he would be Peter Frye.

Many years later, Peter Frye met the English producer, Christopher Fry, who noted the similarity of the name. Peter said, "We are related--through a tin of cocoa," and he told him the story. Christopher Fry, who is related to the cocoa and chocolate firm by a cadet branch of the family which did not inherit any of the family fortune, roared with laughter. He said, "Good luck to you. You've had more from the Frys than I."

Russia, Britain, Germany...

of a non-aggression pact is an echo of old strategies applied to what looks from Moscow to be an unchanging problem. Britain could not accept it and remain a loyal member of N.A.T.O. The Russians have, of course, worked out that equation as well.

Mr. Wilson is reputed to share some of those pathological (as opposed to reasonable) anxieties about Germany which abound in the Labour party. But, as we have come to learn about our Prime Minister, with him the pragmatic conquers everything in the end - even the pathological. It is highly unlikely therefore that when Mr. Kosygin leaves us tomorrow he will take home with him much encouragement about institutionalising Anglo-Soviet relations in any form.

Indeed, Mr. Wilson will have to be extremely careful even over his choice of platitudes and generalities in the final speeches and communique. He arrives in Bonn himself on Tuesday to bid for crucial West German backing in his attempt to leap the Paris hurdle and land Britain in the Common Market. At the moment, Mr. Wilson needs Dr. Kiesinger over Europe even more than Mr. Kosygin needs Mr. Wilson.

But even if Britain cannot accept Mr. Kosygin's conclusions, we should still think hard about his premise. All last week, what Mr. Wilson has been hearing from his Russian guest was essentially what he had heard a fortnight before in Paris. Mr. Kosygin, like General de Gaulle, has challenged Britain to prove herself, first and foremost, as a European power. It is possible to interpret this challenge in a number of ways. It is no longer possible to ignore it.

FRUSTRATIONS

BY RUTHIE

Isn't it frustrating when you have to repeat a sentence a dozen times before anyone hears you? Like when you want the kids to do something. You start off in a pleasant enough tone of voice. Then you repeat. A third time you sound a little impatient. The fourth time you're actually barking.

And all of a sudden, "You don't have to scream like that. We heard you the first time."

You're ready to explode. "So why didn't you answer?"

"I don't know."

Logical, eh? What are you going to do? That's the phase.

But just don't listen to them all the time, perish the thought! You get,

"You don't love us anymore. You never pay attention to us. We'll develop a complex."

Nu, couldn't you bust? You devote your whole life to them and that's what you get.

* * * * * *

It's a little more interesting when you banter like that with your husband.

They're not so dumb though. And I can understand sometimes when they turn a deaf ear. Because most of the time the conversation — or monologue — ends up with an unreasonable request.

Like, "Honey, how about that cultured pearl necklace?" or, "She has the most gorgeous mink," which is rather insinuating.

So they pretend not to hear.

But enough's enough. Sometimes you really have something to say. And you feel you're talking to a block of wood for all the response you get.

"Why don't you listen?" you ask in exasperation.

"Huh? What'd you say?"

"Oh, go wash the wax out of your ears."

"But I'm listening."

"Well, so why don't you answer?"

"I am — slowly."

"You weren't so slow when you proposed." And here I put my foot into it.

"Yeah. And I learned a lesson. If I took my time, maybe I wouldn't get hooked so fast."

"Is that so?" and you drop the subject.

* * * * * *

One fine day you realize you're doing above and beyond the call of duty. After all, as wife and mother you're only supposed to be a housekeeper, companion, mistress, nurse, cook, char, chief bottle washer, laundress, teacher, spiritual guide, chauffeur, entertainer, hostess — and you find you're doing more. Like supplementing the household income maybe.

Then comes the time you collapse — a little bit, anyway.

The folks don't worry at first. They're in a state of shock. After all, you can't do that to them? How dare you fall apart! Someone else, yes. But you? The best horse? Unthinkable.

But it happens, it shouldn't happen.

Then they go into action. "Mom, we'll do this, we'll do that, don't do this, don't do that. Mom, take it easy."

Your better half really looks scared. Not one clean shirt around the place, no pair of socks whole, coffee tastes like mud, no one to find the things he misplaces. He eyes you almost accusingly.

You begin to feel you've committed a crime by getting sick.

So you decide to get well fast. You know, God helps those who help themselves. And it's ukh oon vay (woe) if you need the nursing — no one is as efficient as you.

Everybody promises you the moon, just be yourself again.

* * * * * *

So you're yourself again. And you find yourself in the same rut. But do you complain? Never.

You wash, cook, clean, mend, run errands, go to meetings to show the family you can contribute something to society too, help the kids with homework and everything. And to keep up your courage, you tell yourself a million times a day how grateful you are that you can do everything yourself because you couldn't stand anyone else's potchka-ing (fussing) in your home.

And so it goes round and round.

A Yiddishe Mama Explains Day School

WHY THE WHOLE FAMILY LOVES IT

by Phyllis Dembicer

One day last year my husband and I did something very much out of character for us as acculturated American Jews. To the surprise of all who knew us, we took our children out of public school and enrolled them in the local yeshiva in our city - the San Diego Hebrew Day School. Our friends and relatives were amazed, and wondered what has brought us to such a decision.

Actually, I was the one responsible for it. My husband Dave by no means shared my viewpoint, and in the beginning was very upset. He felt that since we were both active in Jewish affairs and sent the children to a synagogue school for a Jewish education, it was a needless expense to change to private instruction. He had been exposed for so many years to the American "melting pot" theory and the tradition of free schools for all that at first he objected, but nevertheless he went along with me.

Our elder daughter, Robin, couldn't have been more bewildered when she discovered that not only wasn't she entering third grade at her familiar public school, but that she had to spend the summer being tutored in the Hebrew alphabet in order to go to some new school she had never heard of before. Missy, then our youngest child, was just starting kindergarten and faced no similar problems. My problem was arranging car pools and relinquishing free time to drive downtown daily to the school to bring Missy and another child home at noon. In short, I had upset our orderly family's complacent apple cart in order to embark on a hunch.

Why did I feel compelled to change our comfortable routine and send the children to a Jewish school that only a handful of families in our Jewish community supported? Because I didn't want to run the risk of having our children become Jewish dropouts later on. In observing Jewish youth today I noticed that shortly after Bar or Bas Mitzvah they become indistinguishable from anyone else on the American scene. Whatever Jewish knowledge and tradition they might have gained from the Bar Mitzvah preparation seems to be shelved and replaced by the habits, social intercourse, and virtues and vices of the non-Jewish society surrounding them. Apparently the increase in synagogue attendance and the magnificent array of Jewish organizations to choose from has nothing to do with learning how to live Jewishly. I felt that the young Jew and his parents are so much under the influence of this non-Jewish culture, that the maturing youth who wants to remain Jewish is hard put in learning how to do it. I wanted our children to enjoy living as Jews at all times, and it was obvious to me that learning to do this must be done at an early age.

And so with a deep breath we took the plunge. During the summer the school held an "open house" to welcome the new parents and have the children meet their teachers. The faculty consisted at that time of three teachers: one for kindergarten, one for first, second, and third grade (the highest at the time), and the Headmaster, a rabbi who taught Hebrew and religion. After talking with the faculty, looking over the educational materials, and discussing the school's future with other parents over coffee and refreshments, we felt better. By the time we left, Robin and Missy discovered they had a few old friends among the new, and Dave's attitude changed from that of a cautious outsider to one of kinship with the small number of dedicated parents.

Phyllis Dembicer, a native of Los Angeles, lives in San Diego, where her husband, who is in the insurance business, is president of B'nai B'rith's Weinberger Lodge. When this article was written, some months ago, the Day School it describes had only 38 pupils; today it has over 70, and two additional teachers. Each year it adds a grade, and next fall it will have 5th and 6th grades. Mrs. Dembicer now has an infant son, slated to become a yeshiva student some day. This article was written originally for the National Jewish Monthly.

When at last the first day of school arrived, the excitement was no greater for the children than it was for their eager parents. We gathered in the sunny courtyard of the modern building the Day School leased from a Reform Temple downtown. The entire student body was composed of 38 children. The teachers welcomed the pupils and led them in the flag salute and the singing of "My country 'tis of thee." The first Hebrew lesson of the day was learned when the young Headmaster asked the kindergartners if anyone could find the gan (garden), and the first Jewish custom was observed when he presented a keepah scull-cap) to each boy. Robin and Missy and the rest of the students followed their teachers into their respective classrooms and the mothers went into the auditorium for a brief orientation meeting. The secretary told us that since each child was called by his Hebrew name when he was in Hebrew class, now would be a good time to select a name. Robin's Hebrew name is Rachel, pronounced Ra-hel, and Missy's is Miriam.

We left with mimeographed schedules of dates on which the school would be closed in observance of the Jewish and American legal holidays. It was with distinct pleasure that I read for the first time in a PTA bulletin "Closed for the Mid-winter Vacation" and "Closed for the Pesach holiday". I went home satisfied I had made the right decision, a feeling I was to have many other times during the school year.

For parents like Dave and me, who had spent our growing years in public schools that stressed Christian holidays and who had absorbed mostly the American culture, we found that immersing our children and ourselves into the Jewish culture of a yeshiva was a little like discovering the joys of parenthood after many childless years.

Studying along with our children, we understood and appreciated the beauty of the Jewish Calendar for the first time in our lives. Learning about the Jewish holidays at the Day School is living with them on a familiar basis. Each parent is issued a copy of the school calendar which states that the school closes not only for the observance of the High Holidays but for Sukkot, Shemini Atzeret, Simhat Tora, and Shavuot, in addition to the Winter-Hanuka and Spring-Pesah vacations. Before school closes for these holidays the children have studied, sung about, and discussed them at a leisurely pace, and have looked forward to the bright-colored bags of fruit and candy their teachers give them on appropriate occasions. After thoroughly studying the Passover holiday (including a model Seder, which was televised locally) Dave and I were astounded that our little kindergartner not only knew what was the order of the Passover dinner but why. Robin and Missy learned about searching for chometz (products made of grains) which Dave and I had never done. Together we had fun giving the girls wooden spoons and candles and a feather and they led the search to rid the house of chometz. The Jewish holidays taught at the school are colorful and vibrant.

FIND HEBREW IS "FUN"

Hebrew is another subject that is very much alive for our children at Day School. At first I thought that Robin was unusual in her desire to perfect her writing and her knowledge of the language, but after talking with other parents we discovered that for some reason most of the children feel the same way about Hebrew class - they tell their parents that they would rather get their Hebrew homework over with first because it's the easiest and the most fun. I have heard the same statement from Hebrew Day School students elsewhere in California. It was a thrill for Dave and me to realize that some day in the not too distant future our children will be able to understand the prayers in Hebrew.

Religion is taught at the school in the most natural way - by daily example. The rabbi prays with the children every morning before classes start, and even the kindergartners know the Shema. We asked the children if they know why they pray every morning, and they replied almost in unison by asking how come we didn't know that they pray to thank God for the nice day and everything else He gives us. Prayers are also said at lunch time and only after grace is sung do the children run out to play. Their rabbi is someone they see daily, and in whose classroom they sit to learn Tora and the Hebrew language. But he is also a "regular fellow" who favors more and better physical education for the children and who can certainly be called upon without any qualms for the most mundane things, like opening stuck thermos bottles in the lunchroom. So religion to these children comes naturally and is as real to them as the ball they kick around at recess. They are learning to have faith as well as identity.

THEY LIKE ONEG SHABBAT

The biggest day of the week is Friday, and all the students look forward to the Oneg Shabbat, which is welcomed with candles, prayers, cupcakes, punch, and special duties for the lucky host and hostess of the day. The Ima (mother) gets to set the table with the white tablecloth, pass the cupcakes and pour the punch, light the candles and say the brocha! The Abba (father) has an equally responsible role. He recites the kiddush and drinks the wine, which for this occasion is grape juice. It wasn't until the children were in school for almost a full semester that Robin casually commented to her father one Sabbath evening that he didn't know the kiddush the way the boys in school knew it. "Why don't I?" Dave wanted to know. "Because you only know how to say one little line, Daddy," was the reply, "and the boys at school read a whole page and they know how to sing it, too." From that time on it has been our custom on Friday evenings to have our elder daughter continue the recitation of the kiddush after her father gets through with his "one little line."

Since our children have been going to the Day School we have changed our habits to coincide with what they learn at school, and we are finding that we are not doing it solely for the children. We are enjoying the pleasure and peace of mind that comes from living Jewishly. I now maintain a kosher kitchen and have had the fun of being able to start anew, with two sets of dishes and utensils to work with. Dave says that since he started observing the Sabbath he knows what serenity is. A very busy man who works all hours in his insurance business, and serves as president of his B'nai B'rith lodge and as a vice president on the Board of Directors of the Day School, he gratefully looks forward to Fridays, when after sundown the world at large and its problems comes to a halt for him.

There are some parents who appear to be completely non-observant, yet for reasons of their own they send their children to Day School. It was interesting for us to note the questions that cropped up when we were at a Day School convention recently in Los Angeles, sponsored by Torah Umersorah (Torah and Tradition) with which our school is affiliated. There was a query about whether there might not be a conflict between the child and the parent if the school is observant and the home is not. Since outside parents frequently ask members of our school the same question I was curious to know how it would be answered. The rabbi of a Day School in Los Angeles said that since life always has its conflicts, in his opinion the conflict involved here would not be destructive, but creative, with little damage done to anyone. Personally I would like to see the day when a Jewish teenager threatened to defy his parents by staying home on the Sabbath!

The families at our Day School represent an assorted miniature Jewish community. Some are third generation Americans, some migrated from Europe after World War II, and still others reside in Tijuana, Mexico, across the border from San Diego. Some are wealthy enough to give donations throughout the year, and others must send their children on scholarships. In spite of our diversified backgrounds we are united in our agreement of the way we have chosen to educate our children as Jews.

ADVANCED STUDY IS BONUS

Secularly speaking, we received a bonus prize in education. We didn't know that the school had an advanced general studies program, and on the advice of the Headmaster and Robin's teacher, Robin was moved back a grade until she was able to catch up with her former class. She now has moved ahead, and is not only highly motivated by the challenging curriculum but has learned at an early age how to budget her time for the homework that is required almost nightly. The school takes the students on trips throughout the semester and makes steady use of the nearby park and public library. Some of our friends have wondered if it would be a difficult adjustment for a child to go to public school after studying in a Day School. From watching our own child and the few others who came late into the Day School after several grades of public school, and seeing them adjust to two languages, an advanced curriculum, and disciplined homework, I would say the opposite is true.

Now that we are fully integrated into the life of Day School parents, I can look back and see where we were before and where we are going. Before, we were experiencing only the fringes of Jewish education, no matter how many stepped-up programs the synagogue religious school devised. Now we see that proper training in imparting to a child the vast knowledge of Jewish literature, and the ability to practice intelligent Jewish living, and the feeling of love for his Jewish heritage, requires the whole child the whole day. The Jewish child whose mind is tired from public school and who has to attend more classes afterwards twice a week for religious instruction can't have the same feeling for yiddishkeit as the Day School child.
